Ichabod Crane, traveling on to his next teaching job, which happens to be in Tarrytown, New York, arrives after a harrowing journey. Tarrytown is calm and happy, with the exception of the legendary story of the headless horseman. Everyone knows it, young and old.

Upon entering Tarrytown, Ichabod is welcomed by the lovely people of the town, treating him to dancing and drinking. The Tarrytown folk are excited to meet someone new. Ichabod tells them stories of the world outside their little town.

Ichabod meets Brom "Bones" Van Brunt, the town's most popular gentleman, as well as Katrina and her wealthy farmer father, Baltus Van Tassel. Ichabod is pulled into the charm of this town, and even more importantly, the charm of Katrina, much to the dismay of Brom, who has always felt that Katrina was destined to be his bride.

A month has passed and we find Ichabod teaching his students. Mr. Crane runs a strict classroom, and does not appreciate unruly students. During the school day, Katrina stops by to invite Ichabod to the Tarrytown annual harvest festival, the most exciting event of the season. Ichabod is thrilled to oblige young Katrina by attending the festival.

During the harvest festival, everyone participates in their traditional folk dances, competes in friendly games, and celebrates. Ichabod enjoys taking his place in the spotlight, as the most interesting person in town and Katrina's new love interest.

As the harvest festival winds down, Katrina adamantly rejects Brom's romantic advances, and leaves the festival with Ichabod. Brom is left seething with anger and jealousy. He brews up an ill-fated plan to run Ichabod out of town.
